Auditions for God

Play Synopsis

Auditions For God begins as the actors rehearse a scene of their play, which opens in two weeks. They reach a serious stumbling block, however, when they have no one to play the part of God. The cast complains that they cannot rehearse without knowing who God will be, and the director, Ms. Lawrence, assures that auditions are resuming the next day and promises that an actor will be found.

The auditions attract numerous people, all of whom feel they can lay claim to the role of God, but none of them seem right to Ms. Lawrence. Quite a variety of people, from a rock band to a Baptist minister to a tribe from Zimbabwe want to land the part, and many of the cast members believe that the director passes up good choices as she refuses auditioners after auditioners.

The auditions continue, with the cast growing restless and the assistant director, Kenneth, getting in the way, but it still seems as though God is nowhere to be found. Eventually, as Ms. Lawrence reaches the limits of her patience, she finds someone tolerable for the part. Finally, we reach opening night of the play, and the divulgence of "God."
